

Harvey Bell Memorial Prize (for Aboriginal Graduates in Law)

This prize was established in memory of the late Harvey Bell, Q.C. It provides one or more awards of up to $1,000 (at the discretion of the committee) to be paid each year to one or more students of Native Canadian ancestry receiving his or her LL.B. degree in Canada. Mr. Bell practiced law in the City of North Battleford, Saskatchewan, for many years. During his lifetime he took a keen interest in Native people and their communities. In a variety of ways he sought to assist them.

The students receiving the awards are to be selected by a committee of not more than five members made up of representatives from the Indigenous Bar Association, Bell representatives and a representative of the University of Saskatchewan Native Law Centre.

The criteria, which the committee is to apply in arriving at its decision is as follows:

- (a) The probable contribution which the individual student might be expected to make, as a lawyer, in establishing the rights of Native people in Canada and towards the solution of problems faced by Native persons and their communities within the Canadian legal system.
- (b) The student's academic record in his or her law studies.
- (c) In the event that the committee, in considering the above criteria, is unable to reach a decision in judging between two or more eligible students then the committee may give preference to a student who is a Saskatchewan resident.

Students interested in applying for the prize should apply in writing to:

Scholarship Committee,
Native Law Centre, University of Saskatchewan,
101 Diefenbaker Place,
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan
S7N 5B8

Students should enclose a resume of their career and education. Letters of application should give information concerning the student's academic record (transcripts are required) and should also comment on those matters listed in (a).
